Electoral College has final decision

By Karen Painter

Arlene Ellis (R-Utah) or Todd R. Taylor (D-Utah) may be the people who represent your vote in this year's presidential election in November.

Ellis and Taylor are both Utah representatives in the Electoral College. And one of them will be representing the state's popular vote this year in the presidential election.

U.S. presidents are not elected by the "popular vote" individual voters make, but by the nation's Electoral College votes.

The nation's Electoral College seems to be a mystery to many voters as to why it is needed and how it works, especially in Utah.

Each state has as many electoral votes as it has senators and members of the House of Representatives in Congress (including three for the District of Columbia). Utah has five electoral votes because it has two senators and three members of the House.

Both the Republicans and Democrats select five delegates to be electors for the Electoral College.

This year Gov. Mike Leavitt and Lt. Gov. Olene S. Walker both won elector spots for the Republicans with their statewide campaigns. Ron Fox, Arlene Ellis and Provo Mayor Lewis Billings won the first, second and third congressional districts, respectively.

The Democratic electors are Meghan Zanolli Holbrook, chair; Rod Julander, vice chair; Jim Humlicek, national committeeman; Mary Palley, National Committeewoman-elect and Todd R. Taylor, executive director.

Each party selects their electors differently.

The Republican Party selects their five electors through their State Party Convention. Party members desiring to be electors submit a written request to the state party office one month before the state convention.

Then each caucus, or local branch of the party, selects members to be delegates at the state convention. These delegates then vote for the electors at the state meeting.

Each elector can select to campaign across the state or only

Students volunteer for local campaigns

By Jennifer Trendler

'Tis the season for campaigning and politics.

With the general elections coming up Nov. 7, it is what all the news media are talking about. While some are content to sit back and enjoy the horse race, others have decided to get actively involved in political campaign volunteering.

So why do people volunteer? There are many reasons, according to BYU students involved in campaigns.

Brandon Minster, president of BYU College Republicans, said he volunteers because he believes people need to be involved in the political process and candidates need them.

"The candidates can't win without help. They can't talk to everyone," Minster said.

Volunteers get the chance to have an inside view of politics and see the campaign process first hand, said Amanda Heiner, publicity and advertising coordinator for BYU College Democrats. "You can't learn that in books," Heiner said.

The type of work that volunteers do is based on the need of the campaign and the skills the volunteers possess.

Maura Carabello, campaign manager for 1st congressional district Democratic candidate Donald Dunn, said they ask people what they want to do and then try and find something that best suits their interests.

Some of the most common tasks include making phone calls, participating in honk-and-waves, passing out flyers, putting up signs, promoting campus relations and planning events.

According to Minster, it is not always the most glamorous work, but you get to see what it takes to run a campaign. However, all of the students interviewed agreed they have fun and the staff is very appreciative of the help.

"Volunteers are at the top of the food chain here," Carabello said. "They are giving of their time and they should be compensated."

So what type of compensation do volunteers get?

According to some, free food is definitely one of the perks. After Minster had volunteered on a parade float one day, he said Rep. Chris Cannon took them all to the gas station and bought sodas for everyone.

Jayson Oldroyd, a first-year law student, said there were plenty of doughnuts and juices at campaign events when he volunteered for Sen. Bob Bennett in 1998.

Other benefits to volunteering may be a paid position with the candidate in the future. Carabello said it can be a time to prove yourself and get noticed if you are seeking a future in politics. She also said the candidate is more inclined to hire someone who really worked hard for him during the campaign.

However, Nathan Rathbun, campaign manager for Cannon, said that just because you volunteer doesn't necessarily guarantee you a job in the politician's office when he wins. Working on a campaign and understanding government and public policy well enough to run a government office are two different things, Rathbun said.

"I would be slow to hire someone from a campaign. You want someone who understands how a government office is supposed to work," Rathbun said.

But even though paid jobs are few during political campaigning, there is plenty of work to do. Both the Dunn and Cannon campaigns expressed a great desire to have more college students volunteer.

"The campaign depends so much on volunteers," Carabello said. "We don't have as many as we would like."

"You want volunteers," Rathbun said. "As many as you can get."

Both campaigns agree the time between now and Election Day is a critical one for having people on hand to get the candidate's name out and promote voting.

Anyone interested in volunteering can be assured that any campaign will gladly welcome him or her.

Blood shortage never reached Utah

By Ashlee LeSueur
ashlee@newsroom.byu.edu

Recent Red Cross of America commercials that aired throughout Utah suggested a shortage of blood and called all donors to action.

But there never was a shortage in Utah.

"We have not had a shortage here in Utah," said Dr. Annie Strupp from the Red Cross of America in Salt Lake City.

It is routine and always expected to go into a bit of a shortage at the end of summer, right after Labor Day, Strupp said.

She explained that areas of the country were so short on blood, that hospitals were canceling minor surgeries and preserving the depleted blood supply for emergency situations.

"L.A. was the most severe. They get about 40 percent of their blood from other parts of the country. But we're coming out of it now," Strupp said.

Because The Red Cross of America is a national system, which shares the Utah blood supply with hospitals in need throughout the country, some people feel as if they misled the local donors.

Steve Hancock, who has worked at Mountain View Hospital's blood bank for 26 years, said he doesn't agree with, "the way the Red Cross is."

Hancock said he thinks the commercials might have made local residents and BYU students think there was a shortage close to home.

"I personally called three different hospitals in Salt Lake City and none of them are short," Hancock said. "We generally get a lot of support here."

BYU has at least three blood drives per month, said representatives from the Jacobsen Center for Service and Learning. And BYU wards and stakes also host blood drives throughout the year.

Hancock said Mountain View Hospital comes to BYU about once a month.

He said getting on campus was anything but an easy task.

They were told they needed to find someone to sponsor them before they could run a blood drive on campus, Hancock said.

So they struck a deal with a health professor on campus.

The deal dictates that for each person who donates at BYU, the professor earns credits at the Mountain View Hospital labs to do screenings and testing for his health class, Hancock said.

Olympic Games finish with ceremony

SYDNEY, Australia — Sydneysiders watched their beloved bridge spit red fire, as it foamed gold into the harbor below. Then, in a final blaze of luminous glory, the five Olympic rings exploded to blackness.

"Bring back the rings," screamed Malena Cordera, a law clerk who watched in rapt amazement Sunday night with a more than a million others. "I miss them already."

Across the water, real estate mogul Peter Kampfer beamed with pride when Juan Antonio Samaranch pronounced Sydney 2000 the "best games ever." This time, he knew, the venerable Olympics' czar was not exaggerating.

"I'm speechless," said Kampfer, who is usually not. "In my wildest dreams I did not expect everything to go so well. People will go home, and they will remember us."

After seven years of preparation, Aussies had dazzled, charmed and conquered a world that too often forgets about them.

OPEC summit in Venezuela discusses oil

CARACAS, Venezuela — OPEC's summit this week coupled with the U.S. decision to release oil from its reserves appear to have helped stabilize oil prices even though the producers failed to make specific commitments to pump more crude.

Venezuelan President Hugo Chavez said Friday that the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries could increase production if necessary, although the oil cartel claims current production is enough.

Saudi Arabian Crown Prince Abdullah bin Abdulaziz al-Saud also suggested his country was prepared to boost production and Iraq said it didn't intend to withhold its crude from a thirsty market.

The U.S. decision a week ago to release 30 million barrels of oil — 5 percent of its 571-million barrel reserve -- also helped. This week, the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries' promised to work with consumer nations.

Hurricane Keith hits Mexico and Belize

CHETUMAL, Mexico — Coastal residents of Mexico's Yucatan peninsula and northeastern Belize fled their homes Sunday as the dangerous core of Hurricane Keith came ashore, bringing strong wind and torrential rain.

With the storm packing 125-mph winds, scores of people in Chetumal, a bay-side city of 130,000, abandoned their homes. Many live in low-lying areas, in shacks made of wooden slats and cardboard.

Mexican authorities set up 15 shelters and evacuated 800 people from high-risk areas in the region, about 190 miles south of Cancun.

Many residents seemed to take the weather in stride; families waded through streets flooded with ankle-deep water. Others rode bikes through the pounding rain and old men drank coffee on a covered sidewalk.

Hurricane Keith was stationary Sunday afternoon, about 50 miles south-southeast of Chetumal, and about 40 miles northeast of Belize City, where power lines were reported down, the National Hurricane Center in Miami said.

Tiananmen Square protesters beaten

BEIJING — Police beat and dragged away hundreds of Falun Gong followers who emerged from crowds to chant and unfurl banners during China's National Day celebrations in a protest that forced the brief closure of much of Tiananmen Square.

The banned sect's protest in Beijing's main square, one of its biggest acts of civil disobedience, was an embarrassment to Chinese leaders, showing that the meditation group remains unbowed despite a brutal 14-month crackdown.

In the morning, small groups of Falun Gong sect members seemed to materialize suddenly from among the tens of thousands of Chinese tourists who gathered on the square to mark the 51st anniversary of communist rule.

In seconds, police zeroed in on them, shoving the protesters — mostly middle-aged women — into white minivans.

Falun Gong says it seeks no political objectives, just the right to practice free of harassment. Members maintain the group's beliefs promote health and morality.

General Conference

Weekly spotlight

Family studies experts will cover serious issues in a new conference hosted by the School of Family Life and the Division of Continuing Education.

"Families Under Fire: Making Weaknesses Our Strengths" will take place Thursday and Friday at the BYU Conference Center at 770 E. University Parkway.

The conference will feature 17 family science professionals who will speak on issues and challenges families face, said program coordinator Laurel Hornbereger.

Attendees will get answers to problems and will be directed to information they need to resolve their troubles, she said.

Topics being discussed will include "Marriage Under Fire — Teaching Children Morality in an Immoral World," "Overcoming Eating Disorders," "Putting Out the Flames — Pornography and Compulsive Behavior," "Teens Creating Fire — Dealing With Difficult Teens" and "Communicating With Your Spouse — The Do's and Don'ts."

Anyone is invited to attend. Registration can be done at the Conference Center or pre-registration is available by telephone, (801) 378-4853.

Registration prices are $60 per individual or $95 per couple.

"Everywhere we go, we set up accounts and give credits for the community," Hancock said.

The Red Cross is not involved in any sort of a credit system.

"The Red Cross just got right on there without getting anything back," Hancock said.

The Red Cross doesn't use a credit system because they think it is unfair, said Judy Christensen, spokeswoman for The Red Cross.

"We want to provide the highest quality of blood at the lowest cost. The credit system gives advantage to people who have a lot of friends or family locally," Christensen said.

With credit systems, the blood is free only when the patient has someone else donate at that hospital for them, Christensen said.

But that system, according to Hancock, has made a lot of local Utahns happy.

"We had a kid in here that needed two pints of blood. He was from Payson High School, who has an account from us, so we got to take the cost of that blood off his bill. When people work with us, we work with them," Hancock said.

Hancock said his hospital has accounts with many schools and churches throughout the state.

He said The Red Cross is always trying to get those organizations to use them instead, not including that they won't use any credits.

"We're not really trying to push anyone else out of the way, Strupp said. "We are trying to collect a certain amount of units per day."

The Red Cross doesn't necessarily ask people to change their blood drive to use The Red Cross, but does ask them to add another one — just to make things fair, Christensen said.

Mountain View Hospital and Timpanogos Hospital are Colombia hospitals, which provide their own blood, University of Utah hospital also collects its own blood. The American Red Cross supplies most of the rest of the hospitals in the state.

Hancock said he used to give blood to other hospitals when they needed it, but now all IHC hospitals have a strict [illegible] with the Red Cross.

ensen speaks at the Sidney B. Sperry Symposium on symposium focused on how the LDS Church came out in the 20th century.

By Janene Pack

NewsNet Staff Writer

Out of obscurity: The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in the 20th century, was the theme for this year's Sidney B. Sperry Symposium Friday and Saturday.

Susan E. Black, chair of the Sperry Symposium Committee, said that LDS Church President Gordon B. Hinckley definitely had a lot to do with the theme that was decided.

"President Hinckley has lived through 90 years of this century," Black said. "His influence can be seen everywhere through maps, newspapers, television, everything."

The committee was looking at the end of the 20th century and all the wonderful things that have happened, and President Hinckley has definitely had a hand in that, she said.

Many of the speakers mentioned specifically how President Hinckley has been very influential in the growth of the LDS Church.

W. Jeffrey Marsh, associate professor of ancient scripture at BYU, spoke at the symposium about when the press meets the prophet.

Prior to President Hinckley's administration, media relations with the church were infrequent. President Hinckley has worked with the media his entire life. He was the right man at the right place at the right time, Marsh said.

"President Hinckley came to the church with the right skills and abilities unique to relating with the media when the church was ready," Marsh said.

Brent L. Top, associate dean of religious education at BYU, mentioned President Hinckley's work in having smaller temples being built all around the world.

Top said President Hinckley's earlier inspiration to have smaller temples built was put into action so the temples can be brought to the saints and the saints don't have to travel so far.

Many of the other speakers at the symposium gave related talks on missionary work, church growth in other countries and The Family Proclamation.

Brother Top concluded his talk by quoting President Hinckley in saying: "What we have seen is but a foretaste of greater things yet to come."

Students looking for the chance to keep someone warm can get involved by making quilts for people in need.

Students can gather every Friday from 10 a.m. until 2 p.m. in 3215 WSC.

The humanitarian service club, called Service to the World, was started Winter Semester 1999 by Josh Miller, but the club never really took off.

Kurt Knight and Leah Moses, the new program directors, said they hope to get more students involved this semester and have a variety of service projects to work on.

"I want people to realize that there is something they can do internationally and they can really make a difference," Knight said.

He said he plans to do humanitarian service all of his life and shares his desire with others.

Knight said he hopes the group will allow students to broaden their perspectives and see the need for humanitarian service.

Tying quilts, making school bags for kids and educational kits are some of the projects Service to the World is looking forward to working on this semester.

The ultimate goal of Service to the World is to get a big enough operation to require their own room where people can come in anytime they have 20 minutes to spare, said Shelley Spencer, 20, a sophomore from Salt Lake City, majoring in English.

Spencer said she considered Service to the World more of a way to get involved than a club.

er the Titans" is an ma worth seeing,
on't like football.
based on a true story place in 1971. T.C.
igh in Alexandria, na, was home to
of the nations first otball teams.
oone, played very zel Washington, was h who replaced the coach Bill Yoast. played by Will disappointed by intment, and turned
's invitation to be h.

Yoast planned to take a coaching job elsewhere, but was convinced by community members to take the assistant coach position.

The relationship between the two men was tight, but it could have been more intense. The problems between the two were subtle, but the intensity between them did not seem strong enough for some of the problems they had.

Boone was tough on his football players. He struggled with getting them to look past the color of their skin.

The try/fail sequence for this struggle was well done. Boone tried three or four different strategies to get the football players past their prejudice and differences.

By the end of training camp, most of the football players had been cured of any inhibitions.

But that was not the end. They had to return and deal with the rest of the world. The prejudices in town heightened with the start of school. The team members struggled with what they had learned and what those around them were doing.

Boone and Yoast still struggled over the leadership of the team.

Yoast worried that by not being the head coach, he might not be inducted to the hall of fame. He was nominated for the honor due to his wins as head coach.

The school board that appointed Boone to the position of head coach decided that Boone would loose his job after the first game he lost.

Boone found out about the school boards decision upon his return from training camp.

Partway into the football season Yoast was told that he would be head coach before the season was over.

Yoast watched the next game and how Boone was treated and made a choice.

The football players and the coaches had to come together to win both on the football field and in their personal lives with the friendships they built together.

The foreshadowing leading to the end of the film was well done. It helped bring the film together and strengthen it.

The musical score was very good. It was enough to be noticeable but did not take away from the film.

The filming was well done. Continuity problems were not noticeable, but part of the movie reminded me of being at a football game.

During the Titan football games, the good game clips were shown interspersed with sideline decisions and interaction. It worked well for the amount of time available in the film and it was enjoyable. It helped bring the audience in. Many people in the audience reacted to the football plays. It was well done in how it added emotion to the movie.

The movie was a little bit of a cliché, but it made some good points

The parallel between playing football and struggling against prejudice for the members of that team make this movie worth seeing.

Sydney Olympic Games wrap u

Associated Press

SYDNEY, Australia — The Sydney Games bid farewell to the world Sunday in an Aussie-sized extravaganza of exuberance, sparkling the skies and rocking Olympic Stadium in a closing ceremony bursting with the exhilaration of the land they call Oz.

By the day's end, there was only celebration as Juan Antonio Samaranch, president of the International Olympic Committee, gave the tens of thousands packed into Olympic Stadium the words they wanted to hear:

"I am proud and happy to proclaim that you have presented to the world the best Olympic Games ever."

And what Down Under Olympic closing ceremony could be complete without one last rendition of the cheer now known around the world (though not usually in Samaranch's Spanish accent):

"Aussie, Aussie, Aussie!" chanted the 80-year-old IOC chief. "Oi! Oi! Oi!" thundered the crowd.

The United States led the way in the final medal tally, collecting 97 (39 gold, 25 silver and 33 bronze). Russia was second with 88 (32, 28 and 28), and China third with 59 (28, 16, 15). Australia was fourth, with 58.

Greco-Roman gold medalist Rulon Gardner, who ended the 13-year undefeated streak of Russian super heavyweight Alexander Karelin, carried the U.S. flag during the closing ceremony.

The Sydney Olympics end with a bang as fireworks explode, closing the Sunday evening celebrations. The United States won the most Olympic medals with 97 total.

Soccer ties, wi weekend game

Up against their toughest competition of the season last weekend, the men's soccer team triumphed in a thriller against Colorado State and settled for a tie against Weber State.

After a dismal first half of lethargy, the Cougars woke up when Colorado State took a 1-0 lead early in the second half.

"We would've had a hard time beating an intramural team in the first half," BYU coach Chris Watkins said. "But once they scored, our guys decided they would have to try."

The emotional second half brought three lead changes and numerous outbursts from the rowdy crowd of twelve hundred.

"I always knew we were a better team, but I was worried where the next goal would come from," said senior midfielder and co-captain, Art Van Wagenen.

With twenty-two minutes remaining and the game tied at 2-2, sophomore forward, Daniel Yescas, stepped up and supplied the go-ahead goal. Yescas managed to put a ricocheted shot past the Rams goalkeeper to give the Cougars their first lead of the game.

BYU shut the door on Colorado when Yescas scored again to extend the Cougar's lead to 4-2.

The team rejoiced in their well-deserved 4-3 victory.

"Any time you can come back, it's a good win," Van Wagenen said.

BYU freshman forward Garrett Hansen scored the fir for the Cougars.

After the emotion Friday night, BYU c against their biggest r State.

Volleyball splits weekend games, suffers first conference loss to C

BYU volleyball team suffered their first conference play loss Friday night as Colorado State beat the Cougars in straight sets. However, BYU bounced back Saturday, prevailing over Wyoming.

Colorado stuffed 5,307 screaming fans into the Moby Arena to see the anticipated conference showdown Friday night and the Rams didn't disappoint.

The Cougars challenged the Rams early and jumped out to a 9-1 lead in the first game.

However, due to some mental errors, BYU was edged out by a 15-12 margin in the first game of the series.

From there the favored Rams kept the momentum and never looked back as they defeated BYU in three games.

"We played well and statistically we out-played them in most categories, but we had some errors," coach Elaine Michaelis said.

Most of those statistical victories came on the defensive side of the net.

Lead by Nina Puikkonen with nine block assists, the team out-blocked the Rams 25 BA to 14 BA.

Karina Puikkonen complimented her sister's blocking effort by posting six BA.

The Cougars accented their blocking skills with an intense night of digging.

Jackie Bundy lead the team with 12 digs while Melissa Layton and Sunny Tonga posted nine digs each.

The Cougars loss the game from the service line.

BYU posted two aces against Colorado and 14 errors while the Rams served seven aces and only 12 errors.

This lack of serving proficiency allowed Colorado State to set up in their quick offense and more effectively operate it.

Freshman setter K. Puikkonen showed veteran savvy in the hostile environment.

K. Puikkonen dished out 52 assists and had seven kills on Friday night.

However, K. Puikkonen's most notable statistic might have been the fact that all five of her hitters had kills.

Her distribution allowed the Cougar offense more freely.

"Despite loosing three games, we really weret ed. The team came away feeling confident ar couldn't only play with them but could b Michaelis said.

After the game on Friday the Cougars to Cowgirls of Wyoming Saturday night and defea straight games.

N. Puikkonen recorded a match-high, 13 k Cougars with a .409 hitting percentage.

The Cougars also left their serving woes behir

BYU posted 12 aces and only committed s against the Cowgirls.

Richardson remained injury-free, but lost in the finals after being ahead.

"I make silly mistakes," she said. "When I'm up I need to kick it up a grade."

Ferrell said she loved the camaraderie that came in her first college meet.

"There was more of the support that comes from being on a team," she said.

Ferrell lost in her singles final but felt that she and Oswald worked well together when they won the doubles match.

Overall, Manning said he is pleased and sees a lot of potential in his young team.

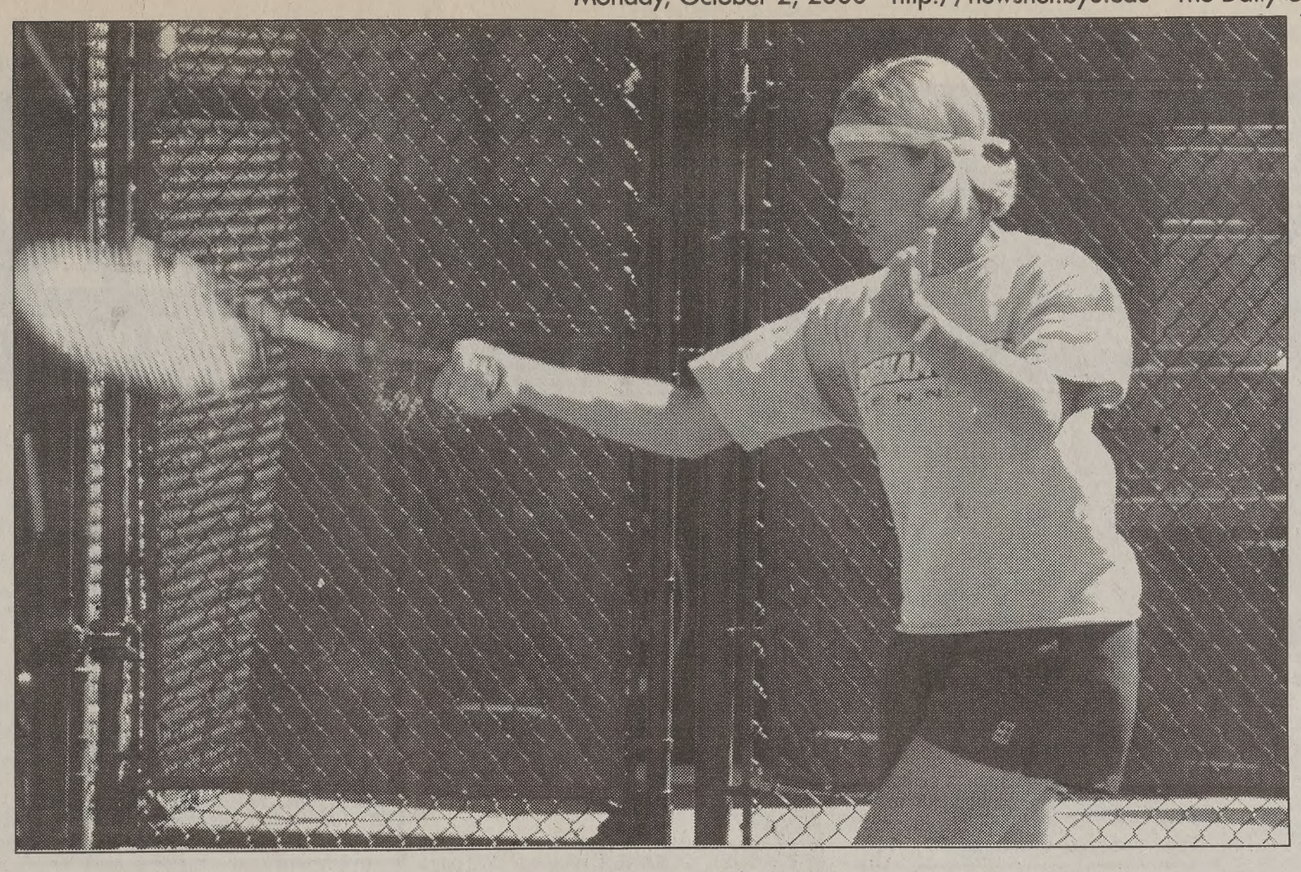
"There is so much talent. That means there is a lot of room for improvement," he said.

Manning and his assistant coach Andy Noorda are said they are enjoying having a team of women who are willing to work hard.

"There are lots of girls who want to be good," Manning said. "Our practices have been really tough."

The tournament marks the beginning of a traveling pre-season that should bring a lot of practicing and many more wins.

"We didn't put the icing on the cake but I'm really happy," Manning said. "We worked really hard to get there."



Dominique Reynolds from Mexico City, Mexico, practices last week. This weekend Reynolds won her singles division at the women's invitational. BYU's tennis team had a team or individual in all six finals of the invite.

Utah plumbers preparing for 2002 Games

By Abigale M. Rothschild
amr39@email.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

Some plumbing inspectors in Utah are extra busy right now as the 2002 Olympic Games approach.

Because problems within the toilet or in drains can cause clogs, building inspectors work to ensure that facilities meet the requirements of electrical plumbing codes and uniform building codes. This is particularly a concern with the influx of visitors coming to Utah for the 2002 Olympics.

"All the venues are submitting plans and will be inspected," said Bruce Palmer, senior building inspector in Provo.

Palmer said venue sites must meet the standards outlined in the Uniform Building Code and the Electrical Plumbing Code.

But toilets can clog even when a facility has received a certificate of occupancy.

According to the Rescue Rooter Web site, foreign objects or inadequate water flow can cause clogs.

Sometimes damaged pipes cause problems.

"The main drain is the pipe from your home to the city sewer or septic system. The most common blockage is caused by roots from surrounding trees and bushes," the site said.

Dixon Holmes, assistant director in economic development, said the Provo government would not be training people in waste management in preparation for the Olympics.

He said the venues would be hiring independent contractors.

Lawrence Burton, water reclamation section manager for Orem, said the influx of people coming for the Olympics probably won't impact the plant he manages, but he said there would be an impact at plants in the Salt Lake City area.

Salt Lake City will be accepting the sewage produced by portable toilets associated with the Utah Olympics, he said.

In Salt Lake City, processed liquids go to the Jordan River and then to the Great Salt Lake. In Utah County the processed liquids go to Utah Lake.

In Utah County, there are four or five major trunk lines leading to the sewer treatment plant in East Bay.

Burton said there are regulations concerning the slope of the pipes.

"If it is too flat, the water will move very slowly, and water will settle in the bottom. But if it is too steep the water moves away from the solid too fast," he said.

The processing of sewage raises environmental issues, but the Olympic Committee says it is dedicated to conservation.

"In 1994 the International Olympic Committee added "environment" to "sport and culture" as the third principle of Olympism," the SLOC Web site said.

The Olympic environmental committee has a 12-point platform. One of the points is to "build facilities and adopt practices which conserve our natural resources."

within the three congressional districts in Utah.

The Utah Democratic Party said the party members select the officials and they automatically become electors during the election year.

Because Utah has historically voted Republican and only has five of the 538 electoral votes — 270 needed to win the presidency — many Utahns feel that their vote doesn't matter.

"I already think that the Republicans will get the electoral votes in Utah anyway so I don't think that my vote really counts, but if no one voted then there would be a huge effect," said Amy Jensen, 20, a junior from Portland, Ore., majoring in fitness and wellness management.

Marshall McConkie, 22, a junior from St. George majoring in political science, said he doesn't feel his vote makes much difference in Utah either.

"I don't think that my vote makes a difference, but in a swing state like Michigan or Ohio I think my vote would count more," McConkie said.

The Electoral College was devised by the drafters of the Constitution as a check against the popular vote of the people to make sure that a poor candidate was not chosen, according to the 12th Amendment

The states with the most population receive the highest electoral votes. Those states are California (54), New York (33), Texas (32), Florida (25), Pennsylvania (23), Illinois (22), Ohio (21), Michigan (18), New Jersey (15), North Carolina (14) and Georgia or Virginia (13 each).

"I think the there should be more equal representation among the states," McConkie said.

Each state receives at least two electoral votes, no matter how small they are, increasing the amount of electoral votes per individual voter.

Not many Utahns realize this about the Electoral College and with the race so close between Gore and Bush, their vote could make a difference this year over other states.

"Because I think that it is a close race this year, there is a chance that my vote will make a difference but if I knew that it would be a landslide, I don't think my vote would really count," said David Stutznegger, 21, a sophomore from Oroville, Calif., majoring in business organizational behavior.

The Electoral College has been known to elect presidents who did not win the popular vote. This happened on three different occasions once in 1824, 1876 and 1888.

In 1824, Andrew Jackson failed to win a majority of the electoral votes against his opponent, John Quincy Adams. The decision was turned over to the House of Representatives to select a president and they chose Adams.

In 1876, Rutherford B. Hayes of the Republican Party faced Samuel J. Tilden, a Democrat. Hayes polled 4,033,950 popular votes to Tilden's 4,284,885. Tilden was one vote short of having the majority in the Electoral College and the Oregon electoral committee was charged with swaying one of their Hayes supporters to elect Tilden.

An electoral commission was set up settle the dispute consisting of five Democrats, five Republicans and five Supreme Court justices. They selected Hayes to be president.

In 1888, Grover Cleveland polled 5,540,050 popular votes to 5,444,337 votes for Benjamin Harrison, yet Cleveland only received 168 electoral votes to Harrison's 233.

he did not have spe- es, Wright said her that drug and alcohol among juveniles in Utah County.

"Drug and alcohol use is going up in this county," Wright said.

However, Wright said the county has a strict, effective program to rehabilitate juvenile drug offenders.

"The juvenile court has developed four drug courts just for kids," Wright said.

Juveniles referred to these drug courts are sent to counseling, submitted to weekly random drug tests, meet with a judge once a week and cannot miss school, she said.

"A lot of kids think they'll walk in and nothing will happen," Wright said. "That is just not true."

Wright said first-time offenders who come into juvenile court go through a two-hour interview and assessment to determine whether they need counseling.

Those who need counseling are then referred to one of the drug courts, she said.

Wright said the drug court process requires a large commitment from youth and parents but can be very rewarding.

"People you never would have guessed have gotten their acts together," she said.

Chanin Johnson, a probation officer with the Fourth District Juvenile Court, said she also feels the program has been very effective.

Johnson said the drug court program is most effective for those youth charged with mostly drug-related offenses.

She said other programs would be more effective for juveniles who combine drug charges with other types of criminal charges.

Johnson said she has personally seen positive changes in youth that go through the drug court program.

"It's not a catch-all; it's not a cure-all, but there is no such thing," Johnson said.

Candidates vie for student votes

Local state Senate candidates are scrambling for BYU students' votes.

Republican candidate Curt Bramble and Democratic candidate John Curtis, both running for District 16, said they hope BYU students will get involved in this year's election process.

"Students are involved in so many things, but they need to take the time to get involved in this crucial election year when they will elect so many influential officials," Curtis said.

Curtis said he has been a lifelong Republican with no political aspirations until his sister, a Democrat in the Utah House of Representatives, submitted his name as a Democratic candidate for Provo's state senate seat.

"I had no idea my sister was going to sign me up.

"It forced me to evaluate what being a Republican or a Democrat really meant in Utah," he said.

Curtis said members of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints sometimes give blind allegiance to the Republican Party because of a handful of controversial issues on the national Democratic platform.

"I realized that Utah County Democrats are very different from the National Democratic Party.

"I decided to run when I discovered that all the issues that had kept me away from the Democratic Party, like their pro-choice stance, did not exist in the local Democratic platform," he said.

Curtis said he is pro-life and pro-gun ownership. He wants a limited government that serves the people.

Bramble said there are some important differences between the parties.

"Republicans focus on equal opportunity while Democrats focus on equal outcome," he said.

Bramble said his political philosophy focuses on personal responsibility, personal dignity and the concept that government does not have a role in providing support from cradle to grave.

"The single most serious problem facing our country is taking responsibility for our own actions.

Bramble said he is running on his commitment, experience and service to the Provo/Orem community.

He is a Certified Public Accountant by profession and has served on several executive boards including the Utah Transit Authority and Provo Airport Board.

Both candidates said education should continue to be the top issue for the Utah Legislature, but they disagree about the current quality of education in the state.

"We spend less money per student than any other state in the Union," Curtis said.

Bramble said he looks at education from a CPA's point of view.

He said spending for education has increased 85 percent, student/teacher ratios have decreased and average class sizes have decreased during the last eight years.

"When it comes to education, people would rather talk emotion than look at the numbers," Bramble said.

Curtis said education is just one of the failures that come when one party dominates the government.

"It's a mistake in Utah to let Republicans control all the top government positions.

"You don't get good government when one party rules," he said.

Curtis said Republicans have run unopposed in this district for the last eight years and the result has been an unhealthy lack of balance.

"In business, the absence of competition breeds higher prices and lower quality. The same situation applies to politics," Curtis said.

Bramble said BYU students should choose a candidate after looking at the facts.

> "It's hard to complain about what you get if you don't participate."
> — Curt Bramble, State senate candidate

"It's hard to complain about what you get if you don't participate," Bramble said.

Curtis said he hopes students see the kind of campaign he is running and will get involved.

"I have tried very hard to run a service-oriented campaign that mirrors how I will serve if elected," he said.

Curtis said he has registered over 300 BYU students to vote on Sept. 22 and is co-sponsoring voter registration drives with various apartment complexes around Provo.

"People underestimate the positive impact students have on this community," Curtis said.
